Long-term effects of intermittent exposure to auditory overstimulation. The long-term effects of a single exposure to overstimulation were studied in animals. Permanent electrode implants were made over the round window membrane of a rat's ear. Tone bursts at 1000, 4000 and 8000 Hz and broadband noise were presented to the animal for 15 min each day for 10 or 30 days in one group, and to the animals in the other group for 4.5 months. Both groups were then examined audiometrically, and their ABR thresholds were measured. After 10 days of exposure, differences in auditory thresholds were not significant, and thus no long-term effects were seen in the first 10 days. However, after 30 days of exposure, the data showed significant differences in thresholds ( $p$  less than 0.001) between the ears exposed to noise and those not exposed, and thresholds were significantly poorer in the animals exposed to noise. Data were also obtained by measuring the rate of change of threshold with time, and the change of ABR threshold with time after exposure to noise. The results of the two methods were in good agreement. Q: What if we choose the orthonormal basis  $\{e_0, e_1, e_2, e_3\}$  for the vector space
