England is looking to prevent India from winning the World Cup in their home waters for the third consecutive time. But, there is still hope for India. England's seemingly invincible team has been beaten many times in World Cup matches, but cricket history shows the biggest underdog can defy all odds. India's World Cup run is one of the most improbable runs in the history of the World Cup. India is looking to put an end to England's 14-year hold on the trophy after they ousted the old enemy from the tournament in 2003 and 2009. India looks to be in the form of their lives and they are one step closer to lifting the trophy. But, the biggest challengers of these much-loved rivals are France and West Indies. They could save India from a disappointing exit. India have beaten the best in the world. England are no longer the class of cricket. New Zealand and West Indies have been swept aside. India is looking impressive in the World Cup 2015. In the final group match

Ask HN: Why would universities still teach CS101? - rj1020 I've been teaching Software engineering for a while.
We've covered things like algorithms, data structures, etc. because we think it's important for a developer to know how to think like a developer. I recently noticed that a CS101 class is being taught at my university. Why would CS101 be relevant to an engineer? I understand there are certain skills needed to be an engineer, but what are those skills and why can't a developer learn those? I've been teaching software engineering for a while and haven't even heard of such a class. I've heard of CS101 being a general class. ===== verdverm You are a developer not an engineer. Who cares? If you do, you might want to look into Software Design, which has all of what you described with fewer words and no bullshit. ----- java-man I am a dev who should be using this, but do not. Not because of CS101, but because I should be learning something more practical. ----- billconan I think coding is a form of communication, it can be used to express yourself and communicate with people. // Generated by CoffeeScript 1.9.3 var Plugin, Version, bind = require('function-bind'); bind = require('./internal/bind'); module.exports = Plugin; Plugin.VERSION = Version; var split = require('./split'); bind.call(Version, 'isNaN'); bind.call(Version, 'isFinite'); bind.call(Version, 'isInteger'); bind.call(Plugin, 'isInternal', { "Module.require": function(name){ return parseInt(Version.isChild(this, name)) || parseInt(Version.isParent(this, name)); } }); bind.call(Plugin, 'isExternal', { "Module.load": function(name){ return
